Not-for-profit organizations rarely possess the financial resources they need and yet they often fail to fully utilize a point of significant leverage: the decision-making capabilities of their employees. Organizations that hold decisions tight to a select number of senior people are missing a significant opportunity to utilize the intellectual, leadership and emotional resources of their staff. Centralized decision-making limits innovation, increases attrition and stifles leadership development.

Please join us for Utilizing and Growing the Decision-Making Skills of Your Employees, a not-for-profit roundtable for HR staff, CEOs, COOs and VPs of social sector organizations.

In this engaging session we will discuss:

- The six warning signs of concentrated decision-making
- The cost of maintaining the decision-making status quo within your organization
- Identifying decision-making challenges in your organization
- Determining and prioritizing the most important and complex work decisions
